ANZ Economist, Sophia Angala, commented:

ANZ-Roy Morgan Australian Consumer Confidence rose 0.4pts to 86.7pts. Looking globally, an array of trade deals reached by the US and other trading partners over the past week may have driven some increased optimism about the economy.

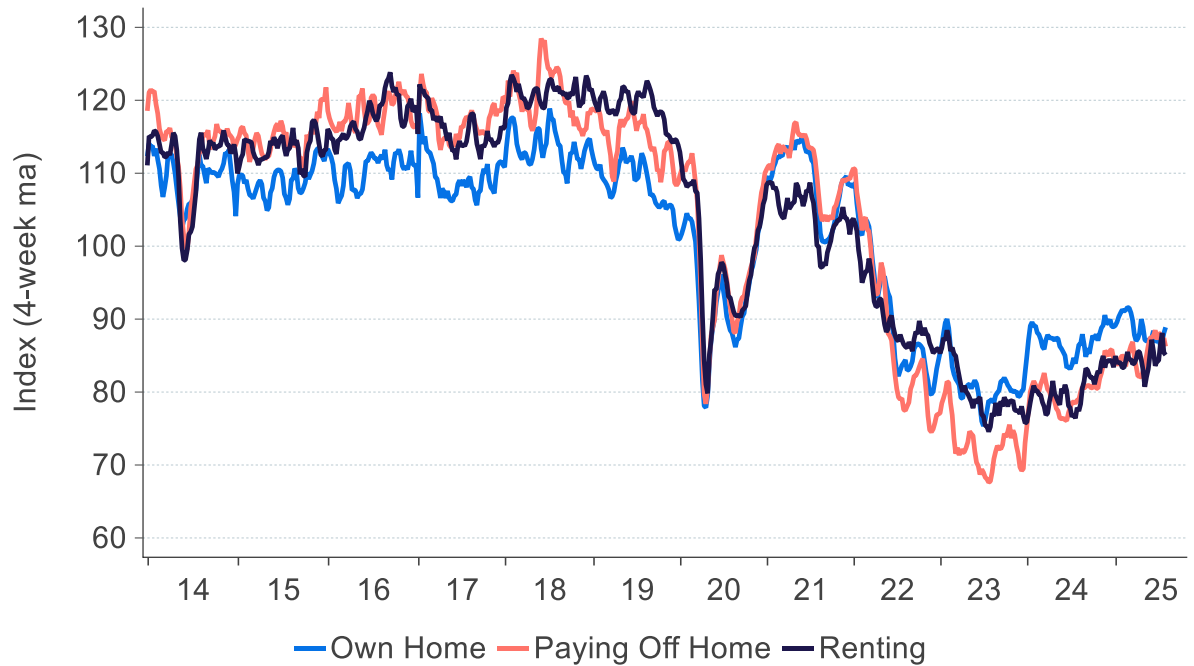

Despite the weekly lift, upward momentum in consumer confidence has stalled. The four-week moving average of consumer confidence has moved within a tight range of 85–88pts since October 2024. Recent trade policy uncertainty and the RBA's surprise decision to hold the cash rate in July have kept confidence from rising, despite rising average incomes. We expect the RBA to cut the cash rate in August and November. Along with further rises in incomes, this should support consumer confidence later in the year.
