ANZ Economist, Madeline Dunk, commented:

ANZ-Roy Morgan Australian Consumer Confidence was steady last week despite the RBA cutting the cash rate 25bp. That said, on a four-week moving average basis the series continues to move upward and is again at its highest level since June 2022.

Across the housing cohorts, confidence rose for renters and those paying off a mortgage but declined for households who own their home outright. Confidence is highest for those who own their home outright and lowest for renters. On a four-week moving average basis, confidence amongst mortgage holders was at its second highest level since May 2022 – which was when the RBA first started increasing the cash rate.

ANZ Research expects the RBA to cut rates 25bp in November. We think the RBA will then keep the cash rate at 3.35% for an extended period.
